Introduction.

In the 'history of philosophy', philosophy is the focus and history wants to understand philosophy. While in 'philosophy of history' philosophy wishes to understand history. Each of this understanding is done according to their agents nature of study. Hence, history trying to understand philosophy pays attention to the past and the developmental stages of philosophy. On the other hand philosophy understanding history pays attention by making enquiry into the facts released by history, philosophy in 'philosophy of history' questions, and tries to find the significance, meaning and importance of facts which are given in history; philosophy synthesizes the information provided by history and tries to analyze is important to the present age. Therefore, history in philosophy of history does not mean just philosophy history, but history of anything.

HISTORY.

History is the study of the past, and the past is a time that no longer exists. The word history comes from the Latin word "historia" meaning "to investigate". History asks questions about a particular phenomenon to be able to ~~get~~ a description of it, 'history is more descriptive than speculative'.

TYPES

There are various types of history as there are various types of people and societies in the world. Everything has a past, which means there are various types of history. "History ^{gives} of the past sheds light to the present - "If there is no was, there would no be an is". Understanding the past enables us to make a clearer understanding of the present and then predict the future accordingly.

Characteristics and Modes

History analyzes, synthesizes and evaluates, It does this through different ~~into~~ concepts, periodization and chronology.

"authenticity is obsolete"

History is past, so we can not avoid chronology.

History therefore has different modes of enquiry depending on what the individual writer wishes to focus.

VOLTAIRE

Voltaire was the inventor/originator of philosophy of history.

During his time, history was focused more on empires and powerful people which made him to ask questions about the validity of such histories.

For him legends should not be considered as history because history is a scientific enquiry of the past. Voltaire aimed at making history authentic and not based on just assumptions.

The Truth of History.

The truth of history is different from scientific ~~history~~ truth, because the truth of science is fixed based on concepts and logic.

The truth of history on the other hand depends on the enquirer who asks the questions, therefore the truth of history is relative.

* usefulness of research -

This doesn't mean that it's not true but because it is only from the lens of the subject that the truth can be determined. Scientific truth depends on the ^{what} object, which means that irrespective of the ^{who} subject who investigates the object, the truth would still be the same.

The historical truth is relative since it is dependent on the subject and sees truth as it is given to him.

* Historiography

This can be seen as the contribution of philosophy to history.

It can be described as the efforts of scholars to make history an academic discipline. (What makes a thing a discipline is methodology, technique, verification).

History ^{before} at the Enlightenment period was not seen as a discipline or regarded as something that can be studied. It was just seen as a human activities. It was in the Enlightenment period that questions were raised about history and how to distinguish it from myths. History was determined through separation until the scholars began to question

..Object of past of history - historiography.
- Vossaie - father of historiography.

Historiography therefore is the application of Methodology, techniques and verification to history, in order to examine the source, verify the facts of the source in order to be able to make an objective narrative. The aim is outlined as follows

- a. Examine/Verify the source
- b. Examine the fact from the verification source
- c. - An objective historical narrative.
